NOTES

ANDROCLUS AND THE LION. By Briton Riviere, R.A. (See p. 5.) A runaway Roman slave, Androclus, sought a hiding-place in a cave; here, too, came a lion, limping with wounded foot. To the slave's astonishment the creature, instead of attacking him, advanced and held up his injured foot for examination. Androclus, seeing the thorn which had caused the mischief, extracted it, to the evident satisfaction of the lion. The sequel took place in the arena, where the recaptured slave was to do combat with a lion for the delight of a Roman holiday. The lion proved to be the previous acquaintance of Androclus, and at once showed his recognition by fawning upon him. The story ends happily, with the release of the slave.

RICHARD HOOKER. By Alfred Drury, A.R.A. (See p. 23.) The "learned and judicious Mr. Hooker"—so called by His Majesty James I.—was born near Exeter in 1554, and was educated at the Grammar School of that city. In 1585 he was appointed Master of the Temple, a post which he held until 1591. During this period he wrote his famous work, The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity. He died in 1595 at Bishopsbourne, near Canterbury.

ABELARD AND HELOISE. By Henrietta Rae (Mrs. Ernest Normand). (See p. 34.) Abelard was one of the most brilliant scholars and orators of his day: students from all parts of France crowded to his lectures. Heloise (b. 1101, d. 1164), the niece of Fulbert, Canon of Notre-Dame, was a beautiful and talented girl of eighteen when she first met Abelard. She was acquainted with Greek and Latin, and Fulbert, proud of his niece's learning, engaged Abelard to give her lessons in philosophy. As a natural result the two, both so gifted, fell madly in love with each other. Several writers are of the opinion that they were secretly married. A son was born, Pierre Astrolabe ("shining star"), but Heloise constantly denied that a marriage had taken place, fearing, it is said, that it would injure Abelard's career. He for his part was anxious for her to be his acknowledged wife. Fulbert, exasperated, sent in revenge some ruffians to Abelard's house, who half-murdered him. The lovers took the vows: Abelard became an Abbot, and built the religious house of the Paraclete. Making Heloise, now a nun, Abbess of this place, he himself retired to a monastery at St. Gildas in Brittany, and became its Abbot. The two met for the last time in 1129, but they continued to write to each other, in Latin, until Abelard's death in 1142. Heloise survived him twenty-two years, honoured and esteemed as the most learned woman of her century. She was buried in the same grave as her beloved Abelard; and their famous love-letters, published first in 1616, brought them immortality. During the Empire the tomb of the ill-fated lovers was removed to Père la Chaise, Paris.

CHARLES WERTHEIMER ESQ.

WILLIAM ORPEN.

"DAVID GARRICK." By J. Young Hunter. (See p. 37.) In the play of this name, Garrick is pledged to disenchant the lady who is in love with him. To his horror she proves to be the object of his own secret affections, but he has nevertheless to fulfil the promise given to the girl's father, and for this purpose he simulates drunkenness. The true state of affairs is ultimately disclosed to the party by the girl's cousin, who meets Garrick at the club, and the play ends happily by the father becoming impressed with Garrick's chivalry, and asking him to accept his daughter's hand in marriage.

A VILLAGE INDUSTRY. By Stanhope A. Forbes, A.R.A. (See p. 92.) The Industrial Class at Newlyn, founded by J. D. Mackenzie and Mr. Reginald Dick, is an important feature of the artistic community of the Cornish fishing village. The class is entirely recruited from the village lads, and under the able guidance of Mr. Mackenzie—who forms the central figure in the picture—many of them have become craftsmen of considerable merit.

THE DEATH OF ATTILA. By St. George Hare, R.I. (See p. 93.) Founded on Mr. Lawrence Binyon's tragedy. Attila, "The Scourge of God," is murdered on his wedding night by his bride Ildico, a Burgundian Princess, through jealousy of Honoria, the sister of Cæsar, Emperor of Rome.

THE NIGHT BEFORE TRAFALGAR. By Fred Roe. (See p. 99.) The following passage from Mahan's "Life of Nelson" describes this incident:—"To-morrow I will do that which will give you younger gentlemen something to talk and think about for the rest of your lives, but I shall not live to know about it myself."

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE MARQUESS OF SALISBURY. By W. Goscombe John, A.R.A. (See p. 133.) The statuettes on the sides are of distinguished ancestors of the late Marquess: Lord Burghley, Queen Elizabeth's Lord High Treasurer; his second son, Robert Cecil, 1st Earl of Salisbury, who also held the position of Lord High Treasurer to Elizabeth and James I. and built Cranborne Manor and Hatfield House; and James, 2nd Marquess of Salisbury —father of the late Marquess. On the side shown in our illustration are the wives of these distinguished Cecils: Lady Mildred, wife of Lord Burghley, who is buried under a magnificent tomb in Westminster Abbey; Lady Elizabeth, wife of the 1st Earl, also buried in the Abbey; and Lady Frances—the mother of the late Marquess.

The figures at the angles represent Old Testament characters, and symbolise various appropriate virtues. The shields and coronets on the sides are those of the six Garter Knights in the Family—three earls and three marquesses. The shields at the head and foot of the effigy are those of Oxford, Westminster, Trinity House and the Cinque Ports. The figure of the late Marquess is shown in the robes of the Order of the Garter.

THE SANDS OF LIFE. By Edgar Bundy, R.I. (See p. 144.) The subject is based on an incident of the Civil War. A certain Royalist, who had given the Puritan army a great deal of trouble, was at length captured on a lonely moor in Cumberland; but it was the Sabbath day, so it was decided to reserve the execution of the captive till the morrow. Taking him to a deserted moorland hut, the Puritans passed the remainder of the day in spiritual exercises, and at the stroke of dawn promptly disposed of the Cavalier.

HOW FOUR QUEENS FOUND SIR LAUNCELOT SLEEPING. By W. F. Calderon. (See p. 151.) Based on the following passage from Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur (Book VI.): "Thus as they rode they heard by them a great horse grimly neigh, and then were they ware of a sleeping knight that lay, all armed, under an apple tree."

THE CHANTREY PURCHASES: "The Fountain," by Charles Sims, A.R.A. (see p. 82); "Diana," by Bertram Mackennal (see p. 141); "Ariadne," by Harold Parker (see p. 153); "A Foul in the Giants' Race," by C. L. Hartwell; and "A Pasturage among the Dunes, Pas de Calais," by H. Hughes-Stanton (New Gallery).
